

For independent curator and art consultant Mary Stanley, life does imitate art. That's because her Ansley Park home is filled with works by some of the most talented emerging and established artists around. Now she is using her knowledge and connections to teach others. Her Young Collectors Club is a forum where Mary works with a group comprised of "doctors, lawyers and industry chiefs" who are eager to purchase but may be intimidated by their lack of knowledge and experience. According to Mary, "This is not about buying on a whim. It's about starting a collection." Naturally, she hopes this endeavor will ultimately translate to future customers and commissions. And when class is over, the discussion continues over cocktails and dinner. You know what they say about all work and no play.